However, when it comes to summative assessment, tests focus not so much on students' performance, but on their knowledge about the language. In this workshop we will explore a true innovation in the field of language assessment that has been called Integrated Performance Assessment. It consists of a sequence of tasks tackling all modes of communication: interpretive, presentational and interactional. Research on the effects of this assessment indicates that it has the potential to capture the actual performance of students in the language, while reducing testing stress and enhancing motivation to use the language.
